“ Ricky, Ricky,Ricky-We grew up together- cousins- one year apart in age and one block away from each other. We went to St. William's elementary school together. Uncle Ernie was always taking us to and from school. One day as we got into the car to go to school, Uncle Ernie was running late. He said;You kids-get in the car but Rick started to say ah dad- but Ernie said shut up.When we got out of school we ran down to the mail box by Ricky's house and saw the remains of Ernie's car- two charred seats and burned up ruble.We ran across the street and found a charred footprint at the bottom of his front steps. We rushed up the steps and into the house to find Uncle Ernie safe and sound.We happened asked Ricky? There was a gas leak said Ernie. It blew up! I know I smelled gasoline said Rick. Then why didn't you say something -you stupid kids! Ricky smiled and answered with a quiet laugh: You said to shut up! Years went by. Rick went to college and I got married, but we always got together for big family events-Weddings Holidays and funerals. I never thought I would be going to Ricky's funeral and writing this. Oh no Ricky I wish we could go back and be together. Love Dale

“ Eric,
My dear friend for over half a century we endured the gauntlet of sadness, uncertainty, loves and more laughter than the law allowed. With all the knowledge you have shared over the years there are two more thing for you to know; you'll be remembered with loving fondness and you'll be greatly, greatly missed.

“ I will miss our conversations, he was very talented and created an amazing body of work in his time on this planet. He will live on in the hearts and memories of those he has left behind and within the works that he gave to the world.
