“ Nancy, my sweet and sassy friend, you are dearly missed. I always enjoyed our lively conversations and laughter as I polished your nails your signature shade of fuchsia. I know you are smiling, laughing, flashing those pretty pink nails and having a grande time with the angels now. Love you. 💙

“ Nancy, my sweet and sassy friend, you are dearly missed. I always enjoyed our lively conversations full of laughter as I polished your nails your signature shade of fuchsia. I know that you are still smiling, laughing, flashing those pretty pink nails and having a grand time with the angels now. Farewell little lady. Love you. Jill “ There're many things I could say to hallow the ground that is Nancy's place in my life. 9/11 10th Anniversary Concert. "You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear." At least as I knew her, Nancy's southern, Piscean way was so full of hospitality and perceptiveness and fabulousness. A dash of sweet no-nonsense.

When we got to spend a moment, she treated me like one of her own. And I thought that said volumes about who she was/is.

Perhaps most of all is that Nancy's home impressed me so much. Her sense of design/style left a lasting impression on me. The pink room. The blue and white China on the walls in the dining room, the wall pockets with flowers, the corner cupboard in the bedroom downstairs. The Victorian balloon-back chairs on the stair landing.

Well, anyway. Suffice it to say I give thanks to God for you, Nancy. And, even here at the grave, Nancy, we're singing a more profound (and I hope, a truly classy) Alleluia to God for you.

“ Nancy Kemp was sixty-one
The day that we first met her
With southern charm and fashion flare
How could we forget her?

By the time that she turned seventy-one
Six grandchildren were her fancy
And even our two little ones
Would call her "Grandma Nancy"

For Nancy, as for all of us
Life could be both spicy and bland
But Nancy handled all with grace
(and sometimes a rum and coke in hand)

We will miss seeing Nancy
She's in her heavenly home
We look forward to that grand Reunion one day,
But for now, our friend, Shalom

Our thoughts and prayers are with Nancy and her entire family. We enjoyed our interactions with Nancy... her warmth, spirit and good humor. We will miss her, but will certainly remember her fondly.
