“ Sean is the only person I know who willingly got up each day at 2 am. In the four years I worked with him, he studied for the CPA exam and passed it about a year ago, earned an MBA from University of Missouri, flipped four homes, finished another rehab that was going to be a rental property, completed demo on yet another rental property, took the real estate class and was planning to take that exam in the near future, started developing his own accounting business, helped his parents immensely, worked with his son, all while working a full time job where he made substantial contributions.

Sean was a son, father, flipper, MBA grad, CPA, confidant, friend, best friend, weight lifter, fearless, tireless, inspiration, leader, handyman, hard worker, kind, and bright. He was planning to become a realtor and landlord. He wasn't planning to be missed - but that's what he has become.

“ So many memories and good times:

1. you were only person who willing wanted to learn a new accounting software
2. you were either dressed in sweat pants/t-shirt or a nice coordinating shirt/tie with those amazing socks
3. you would peer around corners trying to sneak up on us
4. your bee bop jazz singing
5. you always said "I love you" when ending a phone call with your parents or son
6. liquid people story (if you know, you know)
7. saying the 5 trees outside the office was a forest

And countless other little things that one sees when you interact on an almost daily basis for years.

Sean was one of the brightest and hard working people I have worked with. Very good sense of humor too. Will be missed !
